
NEW ENGLAND PLANTS READY TO MEET DEMANDS IN WAR CRISIS

Government to Get Detailed Report on Possible Output of Munitions; Industrial Preparedness

All important steps have been taken to insure that the war crisis will not find the New England plants unprepared to meet the demands of the Government. The War Relocation Administration, which is in charge of the war effort, has issued a call for a detailed report on the possible output of munitions from the plants in New England. This report will be used by the Government to determine the extent to which the plants are prepared to meet the demands of the war crisis. The report will also be used to determine the extent to which the plants are prepared to meet the demands of the war crisis. The report will also be used to determine the extent to which the plants are prepared to meet the demands of the war crisis.

benefits will come as a result of the first year's vaccination campaign. It is important for people to see the necessity of vaccination these dangerous times. The more people who are vaccinated, the more effectively the disease is kept under control. It is in the best interest of the millions of those in the country who I better appreciate the magnitude of this year's vaccination campaign. I have been conducting my own vaccination campaign for many years and I have vaccinated almost thirty million rodents.

"Martin's" is a fascinating "Martin's Rat Killer" has done the work for me. Without it I could accomplish very little. It is the only rat killer I have ever used. Infected rodents die in the country.

UNITED STATES WAGON TRAIN ENCAMPED ON MEXICAN PLAIN. This photograph shows United States army transport wagons in triangular formation during a break in the journey from the border to General Pershing's troops. The wagons are so arranged that they would be of great service as defence works in the event of a Mexican attack. The formation is somewhat similar to that used by frontiersmen with their prairie schooners to prepare for Indian attacks.

More Troops in Camp at Columbus

By KENT A. HUNTER,
International News Service Staff Writer

Columbus, N.M., April 22.—The little frontier town again is assembling the aspects of an important military operation as about 200 U.S. troops and 2500 fresh troops ordered to Columbus and held subject to federal Pershing's order to move to the border.

The Seventy-third Infantry, under Major General William H. Sumner, is moving to join the First and Second Armies in the drive against the bandits already here.

Some 5000 cavalry, under Colonel Joseph A. Gault, are expected at any time. Sixteen women arrived last week.

By International News Service.

Assembly began lists of the first annual report of the government agricultural experiment stations. The planes, as soon as ready for service, will go South.

"Construction of a future began one man when a truck train pulled out for the front," E. L. Holmdorf, for two years machine gun operator in the Mexican campaign, was discharged from the United States Army to join the Villa squad and only with the star of the "Napoleon of the North," General Francisco Villa, Holmdorf returned to the United States.

General Bell at El Paso learned Holmdorf's story and, after a long talk with him, Leavenworth sentence was passed for desertion. Then an offer of trade was made—Holmdorf's life for the life of the man who had killed him and of the possible hiding place of his bandit.

Holmdorf climbed aboard the train and his face carried a smile. His pos-

El Paso, April 22.—American army officials in El Paso admitted today for the first time that the expedition sent into Mexico had not the slightest chance of taking Francisco Villa dead or alive. They foresee the withdrawal of the United States troops.

It has developed that there was more truth than fiction in the Carranzistas' claims that the Chihuahua-Lurago boundary was the dead line.

advance of the American troops. None of the American soldiers has crossed this line. To the south of it, in the State of Durango, Villa is strengthening his forces with each passing hour. To the north of it, the American forces are resting on their arms.

If it were decided to continue the hunt for the bandit chief, the time would be made much more difficult by the opportunity that has been given to Villa to gain fresh recruits and supplies of ammunition. Officers of the border also believe that the American troops would have to fight Carranzistas as well as the Villistas.

Reports reaching the border told of the information that Villa has undertaken an ambitious plan, namely, the overthrow of the present facts government and the establishment of himself as the dominant figure in Mexico. His secret army has approached many prominent Carranzista leaders, already weakening their allegiance to the "El Chief," and pointed out to them that the natives of Mexico would rally to his standard because he not only had defeated the efforts of the entire United States army, but that the people who know the Mexican mind would follow him. Villa's argument is a plausible one.

Other reports affirm that Carranza's difficulties are increasing in Mexico City, and assert that he is preparing to flee to Vera Cruz, where he will establish headquarters, or prepare to flee by sea if he is overthrown.

Carranza's failure to get financial support has militated against his gaining complete control in May. Four days ago, his government boasted that in Mexico City it had had the value of five cents of dollar. The next day it dropped three cents in Chihuahua, and it is two cents.

Inspired reports that fresh government securities were on deposit in New York city failed to check the slump.

After May 1 all duties and must be paid in gold. It is said that the three leading banks of the country are unable to force the government to repudiate its own currency. No Mexican government can without financial support.

First Recordings of Louis Graveure

The Musical Sensation of the Season

FROM the greatest of operatic arias to the simplest English ballads, Louis Graveure displays an amazing gift of interpretation. Never before has such clarity power and vocal abandon been heard as in Graveure's singing of the "Pagliacci" Prologue, nor such tenderness of tone expressed as in his rendering of "Mary," Richardson's famous ballad.

With the new records by Godowsky, the poet-genius, of the piano, and the latest recordings of dainty, vivacious Maggie Teyte,

New Records for May

Instrumental music plays a most important part, preshefing novelties like the marimba as well as exquisite trio recordings, thrilling re-descriptives by Prince's Band and orchestral renditions that range from joyous light overtures to the massive works of the greatest modern Russian composers.

Popular Hits of the Month

Fourteen "up-to-the-minute hits" comprise the Columbia offerings this month. Particularly good are the six duets with "So Long, Letty," and "When Cupid Calls" from "Sybil" as the star performances.

Brice and King, the clever musical comedy and vaudeville pair, enter the Columbia field this month with two of the best of the new songs, and two tremendous operatic chorales; Hawaiian melodies; solos by a new concert soprano, Eldora Stafford, and six up-to-the-minute dance records. It's a treat to visit us this month and hear the new Columbia Records. Be sure to enjoy it today.

REGARDING HEADLIGHT DIMMING

Headlight Law Is Not Respected as Freely as It Should Be by Motorists.

DANGEROUS TO TRAVELERS

More General Recognition of the Law Will Be Most Beneficial.

By J. C. KERRISON.

The headlight law seems to be the one which is most generally disregarded. A study of the statistics of the department of public safety shows that in the last year there were 1,000 violations of the law. This is a very high figure, considering that the law is only a few years old. It is a pity that the law is not more generally respected, as it is a very important one for the safety of all travelers.

The law is a very simple one. It requires that every motorist who is driving at night must have his headlights dimmed when he is within 100 feet of another vehicle. This is a very important rule, as it prevents accidents which are caused by the glare of the headlights. It is a pity that so many motorists do not take the trouble to dim their headlights when they are within 100 feet of another vehicle.

Many Owners Enjoy Going Over the Car and Keeping It in Proper Shape Almost as Much as They Like to Ride.

By Merle Shepard.

Ground hogs, robins, orcan grinders and other signs of approaching summer have passed out of date. In their place cylinder oil, valve grinding compound and other signs of the spring tuning-up season hold sway. Grays and battered liners do not dampen the ardor of the motorist who loves to "inker around the old boat," and this is the time of year when every garage, whether it is in town or country, holds its quota of tinkering car owners, who a little later will be covering the roads of the country.

It is a decidedly American characteristic that most of the men who own cars love to work around them and keep them in top notch condition. These men often rather do laborious work than sit in the shade and do nothing for them, and it is not always for the money that is saved, although that counts, too, but for the sheer joy of getting into the heart of the mechanism of the car, and to know that when the engine is purring with content as it carries the car over the road, that it is largely to their efforts that the smooth running is due.

No doubt this will be the first year that a large number of people do this work, and a few hints as to the order of procedure and what should be done after will remain of only little use. Most there are a number of things to be done, and they are not in any particular order, but a few hints as to the order of procedure and what should be done after will remain of only little use.

The first thing to do is to inspect the car over and see what is in the way of its running. The engine should be run for a few minutes to see what it is doing, and then the oil should be changed. The oil should be changed at least once a month, and it is a good idea to change it more often if the car is run a great deal.

The next thing to do is to inspect the car over and see what is in the way of its running. The engine should be run for a few minutes to see what it is doing, and then the oil should be changed. The oil should be changed at least once a month, and it is a good idea to change it more often if the car is run a great deal.

opening up. Prepare a strong soda solution by taking a quart of soda or bicarbonate of soda and adding it to a bucket of hot water. Pour this into a bucket of water. The result that comes to us from the pioneer in the making of red tires is the product of four years of careful experimenting. It will be noted that the horizontal projections are sharp and clean cut as if made with a knife. There is nothing ragged, ragged or unbalanced about them. Yet at the outer edge

These lilies are full, moulded on a stem, round and the greatest care was taken in getting the kind of projection done that would be most effective on paper. The so project and set as high or as deep as on some tires for it has been found that bulging of rubber have a tendency to press in the tires and make them

The greatest wish of the Empire is to eliminate the tendency to sideways thinking, and stems are treated as perfectly as a smooth tire. The result is a perfect road for the use of the non-kind without any of the disadvantages of the sideways position. In many cases, a non-kind is made a kind.

Because Buying a Studebaker
SAVES from $250 to $400—
Our Detroit plants are running about 150 cars a day BEHIND ORDERS!

Of course, what's going on in our Detroit plants—our difficulties in keeping up with orders—our being 150 or so cars a day BEHIND orders even with one of the largest factories in the whole industry—all that makes little difference to you, as we know. But we do know that the REASON we can't keep up with orders DOES make lots of difference to YOU. For that reason is simply this:

The SERIES 17 Studebakers cost from $250 to $400 LESS than any other cars that give as much. Said in another way, YOU SAVE FROM $250 to $400 by buying a Studebaker.

Now, we don't expect you to say: "That's so" and rush down to buy a car. We only want you to turn that thought over in your mind a couple of times: "$250 to $400 saved by buying a Studebaker"—and then come down and make us PROVE it.

We CAN prove it—either here in the Showrooms or off on the road. We can prove it side by side with any other car you can name—or on the toughest hill in the neighborhood—anywhere and any time you say.

And when you've seen these SERIES 17 Studebakers and know what they offer, THEN go see those other cars and make the salesman tell you WHY they want $250 to $400 more? and WHAT you get for the extra price? and whether it's worth paying that much higher price for nothing more.

[See a Studebaker—and save yourself $250 or more.

St. Petersburg, April 22.—Various social handicaps may be the excuse for those who disclose themselves on the football gridiron were described recently by Alton A. Sings, Michigan's football coach for the last twenty years, before the Michigan Fellowship Club at the Hotel de Ville.

The Polish, Scotch, Irish, French, and Hungarian seem to predominate in the male ranks of the game. The Irish are particularly successful on the football field. They have dash and aggressiveness and imagination. "Warhorse" Charles Allen is just the first example of one who is Irish and belongs to this type.

Property Restrictions and How They Operate

Their Enforcement Depends Upon the Active Interest of Abutting Owners.

This is the thirteenth of a series of articles—each complete in itself—devoted especially to the home builder or investor who is inexperienced in real estate matters. The articles deal with every phase of the purchase and construction of a home. The next article in the series will appear next Sunday. Questions concerning these articles should be addressed to the Real Estate Editor, Boston American.

Notwithstanding the important part real estate restrictions play in regulating the character of a community, the term is only vaguely understood by the average man who is neither a lawyer or real estate operator.

The man about to buy a lot for a family home wants his land restricted. He knows that someone or other the restrictions will protect him against undesirable neighbors. Somehow the mystic words in his deed which constitute the restrictions, so-called, will do all that is near the property. He will use "three daffy" or other structure which will tend to impale the value of his property.

It is exactly how the restrictions will operate to protect his property he only vaguely surmises.

In these days, when the practice of applying restriction to real estate property has become widespread, the knowledge of the nature, extent and operation of such restrictions is important both for the prospective buyer and investor in real estate.

REAL USED CAR OR MOTORCYCLE BARGAINS APPEAR EVERY DAY IN BOSTON AMERICAN WANT ADS

Motorcycles and Bicycles.

This Machine
Will Get
You There

It is this ability that has made the Harley-Davidson the most popular motorcycle in this section. Last year was the greatest year for the Harley ever had—over 100,000 years of success.

This Year There Have Been Twice as Many Harleys Sold as in the Same Time Last Year.

THE ANSWER:

HARLEY-DAVIDSON
With WALKER SERVICE

Last year the Harley-Davidson was sold half Harleys and half of another make. This year was the ALL HARLEY YEAR. The Harley-Davidson was sold twice as many as in the same time last year.

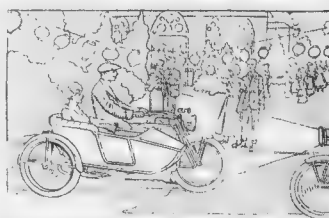

Last year the Massachusetts Harley-Davidson sold two Harley-Davidson motorcycles. This year they sold 100 Harley-Davidson motorcycles. The Harley-Davidson was sold twice as many as in the same time last year.

The 14-Horsepower Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle is the most popular Harley-Davidson in the world. It is the only Harley-Davidson that is sold in the United States.

The Last Word

The new Harley-Davidson is the most popular motorcycle in the world. It is the only Harley-Davidson that is sold in the United States. It is the only Harley-Davidson that is sold in the United States.

RIDE THE BEST
W. J. Walker
178 Columbus Ave.
BOSTON

As the Harley-Davidson stands the leader in Motorcycles, Columbia stands in Bicycles. We have all models in stock, sold with Walker Service and guaranteed.

Branch—48 Spruce St., Lynn, Mass.

R-S Means Real Service

As a whole, the R-S is unequal. It is almost impossible to find a motorcycle that is as good as the R-S. It is the only motorcycle that is sold in the United States.

The Mechanism of the R-S is the most popular motorcycle in the world. It is the only motorcycle that is sold in the United States. It is the only motorcycle that is sold in the United States.

INDIAN

INDIAN Motorcycle is the BEST Motorcycle

WHEN a stock motor shows its ability day after day in all sorts of tough tests, you get the true angle on a quality motorcycle.

Stock models of the New Indian Powerplus Motor perform brilliantly every time they have an opportunity of proving their superiority. For power, speed, climbing, cleanliness, noiseless action and endurance they are mechanical marvels.

The 1916 Powerplus Indian operates at the lowest cost. Don't take our say-so for it—find out from an actual demonstration why it's absolutely the BEST.

CHAPTER I.

The Warning of Death.

D R. PAYSON ALDEN, a man of the most refined and aristocratic tastes, was seated in his study, looking out of the window at the beautiful view of the city. He was a man of about thirty-five years of age, with a high forehead, deep-set eyes, and a well-cut nose. He was dressed in a dark suit, and his hair was graying at the temples. He was looking at a book in his hands, but his mind was wandering. He was thinking of the many things that had happened to him in the last few years. He was thinking of the death of his wife, and the many strange things that had happened since then. He was thinking of the many people who had come to him for help, and the many things that he had done for them. He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said. He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said.

He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said. He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said. He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said.

He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said. He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said.

These circumstances had led him to the conclusion that there was a link between the two. He was thinking of the many things that he had seen, and the many things that he had heard. He was thinking of the many things that he had felt, and the many things that he had thought. He was thinking of the many things that he had done, and the many things that he had said.

The Sign of the Devil-Worshippers

MRS. MAYNARD read the letter with a trembling hand. It was a letter from her mother, and it was a letter that she had never expected to receive. It was a letter that was full of strange things, and it was a letter that was full of things that she had never heard of before. The Mysteries of Myra

"I'd love to see the Devil again. May I go?"

Mrs. Maynard had another struggle to conceal her agitation, but answered softly: "No, my dear, we have other plans. It is absolutely impossible to see him again in the week will be all right."

Myra pouted in girlish disappointment, but Mrs. Maynard's negative was adamant. After a few more of chatter, Varney made his departure.

At the door, he pressed Myra's hand with unusual warmth.

"Never mind, dear girl—try to surprise me on your birthday night, even if mother is as selfish as to want you all to herself."

And so he went, leaving Myra wondering.

CHAPTER IV.

The Intruder.

THE entrance of Willis foretold further discussion. Mrs. Maynard studied the card with bewilderment.

"Dr. Payson Alden—who is he?"

Then she remembered. This was the same man who had written the disquieting message—"Tell him to wait, Willis," she instructed.

As Mrs. Maynard entered the drawing room she was astonished to see the visitor rapt in admiration before Myra's portrait.

"What is it you wish, sir?"

Dr. Payson Alden turned abruptly.

"Mrs. Maynard, I apologize for what may seem presumption. I have come to see you for the sake of your daughter."

Myra's mother bowed stiffly.

"To make a long story short, I have been devoting myself to a peculiar study for several years. My purpose is your daughter's case, to prevent the commission of a great crime for I have learned from my knowledge of the occult that—"

Mrs. Maynard's face stiffened at the mention of what was to her the most dreaded word—the language, "occult."

"You must excuse me, Mrs. Maynard."

"But it is a matter of life and death. I will not discuss this to you."

Myra's mother's face was a mask of horror.

She nervously left the room. Alden turned to leave by the front door. He paused hesitatingly before the portrait of the girl. Why had she been marked for death?

Why had her two older sisters met mysterious deaths on their eighteenth birthdays?

Must there not be some reason deeper than the possibility of obtaining her inheritance now that the two older sisters had been cut off of the way?

Now, indeed, was he to strike back at the intangible hand of human devil to whom alone walls and distance meant nothing in their annihilating power.

How was he to locate their secret place of communion?

Unconsciously his thought turned to his personal interest in the beautiful young girl. It was curious how his early professional interest had been turned into a strange love. A girl he had never formally met.

In the days when he had first gained knowledge of the mystery, he had followed her. He had made it a point to study her intently without her knowledge.

He had observed her at churches and at dances. He had by then his rule of her life to attend and study her every action.

"Here she is," he mused. "A man never years older than Myra Maynard, as sentimental as a schoolboy. I never believed in love at first sight—and yet each time I have seen her it has been an additional first sight. For the first time I have discovered new claims. Love, as mysterious as anything else of the spiritual. All my science cannot drive it out of my heart."

He turned, gazed at his just as a silver "Good morning" greeted him. There before him stood the in the mission of all his secret dreams and hopes.

"What is the mystery about me?" she asked with girlish curiosity.

"You must pardon me, Miss Maynard," he replied, courteously. Alden believed in playing fair, and there was no such art in him that he dared not antagonize a mother.

"What is it to do about this last day or so?"

She made the first blunder.

Alden was also out of his usual calm. "Why, why, that is the plan of the devil worshippers. You mean this?" Blitting at the table he rested his hand upon the church seat, with thumbs pointing upward. Myra realized now that the curious attitude gave the semblance of diabolical horns. She looked at this ridiculous whimsicality.

"Yes, isn't it funny?" and she faced him, holding her own hands in similar position.

At this juncture her mother returned to the room, to behold the ghastly spectacle of her own daughter and this intrusive stranger making the horrendous sign to each other. She screamed and called for the butler as Alden sprang shamefacedly to his feet.

"You monster!" she cried, hysterical in her terror. "Get! Leave my home! Willis, show this person out!"

She caught at Myra and dragged her frantically from the room, as the glaring Willis marched behind Alden.

Alden returned to his laboratory, to work with feverish hope upon his deductions of the case. His heart was aching, despite the apparently unsolvable nature of the affair, for he had not met and spoken with his divinity.

That evening Arthur Varney was the guest of Mrs. Maynard and Myra at dinner in the charming old house.

A skulking figure moved across the grounds of the Maynard estate.

The man approached a window from which a stream of light poured gently forth. Peering in, he beheld the three sitting at the table. He seemed satisfied, and with a surprising familiarity with the house, he darted down the side of the building, trying each window. At last he found one unlocked. He opened it softly and crept through the aperture.

The intruder had entered the library.

On tiptoe he walked toward the stairs, using a pocket flashlight to peek his way by occasional cautious flashes. He tried first one door, then another, until he found the room which seemed the particular object of his search.

He entered this; it was Myra's.

He took a small glass phial from a pocket and with the aid of the pocket light he carefully smeared a dark stain over the knob. Then he left as silently as he had come, taking no jewels or other valuable with him, for this nocturnal visitant was no burglar.

CHAPTER V.

The Underground Chamber.

At midnight, as the last stroke of twelve died out from the dark bell of the old church down the street, Myra awoke in her sleep, sighing as in some unhappy dream.

The girl sat up in bed and stepped to the floor, slowly adjusting her bedroom slippers. Her lips moved as though she were speaking.

CHAPTER VI.

The Spell of Black Magic.

AT that afternoon Arthur Varney dropped into the Maynard home for tea. He observed the haggard lines of Mrs. Maynard's face, and even Myra's nervousness was apparent.

More curious still, however, was Varney's lack of the usual sangfroid—he smoked four cigars during the hour of enforced gaiety. There was unusual tenderness in his manner as he turned the music pages while Myra strummed the piano softly but dejectedly at this and that bit of the classics. Once he walked to the window to watch the busy heavers shovelling coal down the chute to the furnace room in the basement.

But he did not see them.

Myra was playing a heart-knitting nocturne of Chopin's. Varney's face, unseen by either of the two women, was twisted into a paroxysm of emotion and tears trickled down the face so generally phlegmatic in its cold calm.

"I can't do it—love her—I can't!" he muttered between clenched teeth.

Then his thought changed and a frightened look came into the black eyes. "But if I don't obey—ugh!" and he shuddered as might one plucked in the choking grip of some monstrous reptile.

A man approached up the drive, garbed the same as the coal-heavers.

He passed them unnoticed, reaching the kitchen door, where he asked the maid to admit him to the cellar to shovel the falling coal into the bin. The maid led the way. He began to work industriously. No sooner had she disappeared than he tossed aside the shovel, tiptoeing up the stairs again, to glide noiselessly through the deserted back hall into the dining room. Then he slipped to the stairway.

Upon the carpet of the steps were some tell.

Hunter Wasp and Rich Man's Son

The picture on this page illustrates the method which the wasp provides for its young one. It is a scene of nature, beautiful, by the French naturalist Fabre, in his book "The Hunting Wasp."

It was observed by various scientists that when a wasp's nest was opened, the young wasp was found growing fat, feeding upon the body of a caterpillar, or some other insect. The caterpillar, however, was not it for a long time, but it was put away. But Fabre, by observing, perceived that this was impossible.

Others had said that the wasp through its sting injected into the captured insect some embalmment, and that prevented decay, and wondered what it could be.

Fabre made this astounding discovery: The hunter wasp catches the cricket or the caterpillar, and stings it in such a way that the creature is absolutely paralyzed, preventing movement and yet not destroying life. In certain insects attacked by the hunter wasp, a nervous organism is so arranged that a single place paralyzes the entire insect. In such cases, the wasp inflicts the one sting on the victim.

Other insects, the many ringed caterpillars, are stung in many places. And this is necessary, the wasp accomplishes it with marvelous precision, never failing.

When the prey captured and paralyzed by the sting of the wasp has been laid away in the wasp's nest, the mother wasp lays her egg upon the body of the victim. And her wonderful knowledge tells her just where each of the captured victims must be stung also tells her on what part of the victim's body to lay her egg. Marvelous knowledge frozen in her mind tells her that the child to be born, which she will never see, is feeble at first and can eat only the most delicate parts of the victim provided for it. The mother wasp, therefore, stings the mouth directly attached to the victim's body. It begins eating the instant it is born.

If you read Fabre's wonderful book—and there is half a dozen of them that should form part of an intelligent education—you are filled with wonder on every page. You learn that no scientist can tell the function of a wasp in suspending death and keeping a creature alive. You are amazed to learn that one of the wasp's stings, paralyzed with a poisonous sting, laid away underground in the earth, will live for weeks, whereas that same creature, unparalyzed, confined without food or drink in a box by the naturalist, will live only a few days, a week at the most.

The amazing outcome of this is that the wasp, a tiny, transparent, worm-like creature, feeds upon the miserable insect paralyzed alive that lies at its mercy. It grows big and fat, enters a stage of torpor and finally emerges with wings and legs and fighting weapons and sting and poison—a fully developed wasp.

At this new creature in its turn starts out, knowing where to find the insect that its unborn young will need, knows how to use its sting to paralyze the insect without destroying life, and it does this having been taught, without having seen the same work of murder and science done by any other wasp exactly what its own mother did before it was born.

At the call of nature, Fabre's book tells us, how the wasp stings, overcomes and paralyzes its prey.

At this spot, consider the resemblance between the hunter wasp and the rich man, and one or two other thoughts that suggest themselves.

The picture shows a mother wasp injecting and murdering, holding down a helpless cricket, and keeping the blows of the cricket's powerful stinging legs, stinging, poisoning and paralyzing it.

Your imagination shows you this same wasp burying the cricket in its nest, laying an egg on the cricket's body, and leaving the miserable creature to be slowly devoured while still alive the young wasp to be born, and you say, HOW HORRIBLE!

But what moral difference is there between that hunter wasp that leaves a creature half alive to feed its unborn young, and the rich man who

This picture shows one of the greatest marvels in life on this earth. It shows the "hunter wasp" seizing and paralyzing the victim that is to be stored away to feed the unborn baby wasp. Intelligent readers will find in insect life as we shall briefly describe it a thousand interesting suggestions and interesting comparisons.

First they will think of the close resemblance between the mother wasp providing insects half alive to feed the unborn young and the RICH MAN providing workers that do not more than HALF LIVE to feed and support in luxury his young.

engages in the exploitation of child labor? Does he not leave a factory full of poor creatures, half alive, upon which his young are to feed in years to come?

Does not the man who organizes a band of workers on a basis of mere existence, barely enough to keep them alive, and who leaves that band of workers to supply his children with luxuries and the unnecessary do exactly what the wasp does?

Is not the wasp the more merciful of the two since she stings and paralyzes her victim so that it probably feels very little sensation when the young wasp begins eating?

The difference between the idle rich man's son who lives upon half paid, half-alive workers, and the ferocious young wasp that with its first second of life begins eating a living body, is a difference of imagination rather than of fact.

Another thought more interesting and important. To what extent will human beings one day inherit knowledge, as the hunter wasp and other insects inherit the marvelous knowledge that they use?

Fortunately, while the wasp is forever murderous, always killing, and the ant forever a driver of slaves, human beings change and improve.

A hundred thousand years from now, if wasps still exist, they will still paralyze miserable creatures to be eaten alive by young wasps.

But a hundred thousand years from now, no man will leave a factory crammed with child workers that the owner's young may live upon them and eat them half alive.

More important, therefore, than the brutality of the wasp or the brutality of the child labor employer is the marvelous faculty of INHERITED KNOWLEDGE which the insects put before us.

No one will foolishly say that men will never inherit knowledge because they do not inherit it now.

For hundreds of thousands of years before there were any men on this planet, the various insects were solving their problems, finding what to do.

What the wasp does with her sting when she performs an extraordinarily able surgical operation, her ancestors have done for thousands of centuries.

During those hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of years the insects have been able to transmit, complete and entire, to their young ones the knowledge which unquestionably they gained slowly by experiment and selection.

If it should be suggested that in years to come a child would sit up in the cradle and talk Greek and understand mathematics, or that a young boy out that whereas the pointer dog is taught artificially to point at sight of a game bird, pointer puppies never taught have been seen to lift the front foot at the sight of a small chicken—the beginning of inherited knowledge, apparently.

Think what civilization would be if children could be born with the knowledge of centuries stored away in their brains. Poor Adam and Eve were put on the earth not knowing good from evil: They had to find out slowly to their cost the difference between the two—and it has taken the rest of us a good many thousands of years to recover from the painful part of the lesson.

Suppose that the races should be born not only knowing good and evil but knowing science and mathematics, possessing at birth the knowledge which for a human being would be as great, as important and as sufficient as is the wasp's knowledge for a wasp.

Then the years of study along those lines would be eliminated.

The child could begin intellectual activities where the old man now leaves off.

He who wants a real education finds at fifty that he has just begun, and at eighty or ninety he dies and has not finished.

Life would be worth while if we could begin possessing stored away in our brains the accumulated knowledge of millions of years behind us, and devote our energies to adding to that knowledge, instead of living, as we do now, simply to acquire for ourselves what is already known.

In the future ages, when real study is begun, when men shall have conquered the earth, finished their murdering of each other, drained their swamps, irrigated their deserts, dug their canals and BEGUN TO LIVE, the study of the insects and of the lessons they teach will be a very great branch of study indeed.

With deep interest and as a warning to themselves, men will study those strange types of arrested development and be careful not to fall into perverted ways, as ants and bees and wasps and others have done.

They will seek to store up knowledge without limiting it.

It would be a desolate earth indeed if the highest living creature upon it, man, were a creature of habit born with his knowledge, never adding to it, going through his routine as the insects do.

But fortunately a higher destiny is reserved for him. He will add to his knowledge but NEVER COMPLETE IT.

Now for a sample of the Frenchman Fabre's wonderful description of the insect life that swarms at our feet.

In the following quotation he tells how the wasp called the Great Cerceris overcomes and paralyzes a weevil intended as food for the unborn wasp:

"The wasp finds her victim and, gripping its snout with her powerful mandibles, soon has it at her mercy. Then, while the weevil rears on his six legs, the other pressed her forefeet violently on his back, as if to force open some ventral joint. I next saw the assassin's abdomen slip under the weevil's belly, bend into a curve and drive its poisonous lancet briskly two or three times into the joint of the prothorax, between the first and second pairs of legs. All was over in a moment. Without the least convulsive movement, without any of that stretching of the limbs which accompanied an animal's death, the victim fell motionless for all time, as though struck by lightning. It was terribly, and at the same time wonderfully, quick. The murderess then turned the body on its back, placed herself belly to belly with it, with her legs on either side, clasped it and flew away. Thrice over I renewed the experiment with my three weevils and the process never varied.

This weevil is an insect with a nervous organization that makes it possible to paralyze the entire body with a sting in one single place.

It is different with the powerful cricket which must be stung in three separate places in order to make it absolutely helpless while still living and make it a safe prey for the unborn wasp.

Read the following extract and learn how to observe scientifically and write brilliantly from this Frenchman Fabre. The particular kind of hunter wasp in this conflict is called the Sphex.

The terrific Cerceris takes to flight, hoping as fast as he can; the Sphex pursues him foot-pace, reaches him, ruses upon him. There follows amid the dust a confused encounter, wherein each champion, now victor, now vanquished, by turns is at the top or at the bottom. Success, for a moment undecided, at last crowns the aggressor's efforts. Despite his vigorous kicks, despite the snaps of his pincer-like mandibles, the Cerceris is laid low and stretched upon his back.

The murderess soon makes her arrangements. She places herself belly to belly with her adversary, but in the opposite direction, grasps one of the threads at the tip of the Cerceris's abdomen with her mandibles and masters with her forelegs the convulsive efforts of his thick hind thighs.

At the same time, her middle legs hug the lower sides of the beaten insect; and her hind legs, pressing like two levers on the front of the head, force the joint of the neck to open wide.

The Sphex then curves her abdomen vertically, so as to offer only an unattractive convex surface to the Cerceris's mandibles; and we see, not without amazement, the poisoned insect draw into the victim's neck, next into the joint of the front two segments of the thorax and lastly toward the abdomen.

In less time than it takes to relate, the murder is consummated; and the Sphex, after adjusting the disorder of her toilet, makes ready to haul home the victim, whose limbs are still quivering in the death-struggle.

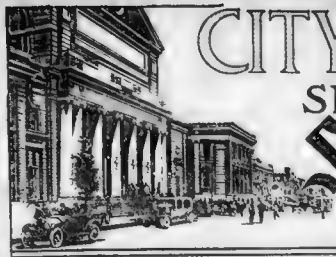

It is this fight between the cricket and the hunter wasp that is illustrated in the picture on this page.

We wish it were possible in this limited space to give you other extracts from the writings of this great Frenchman to whose intelligent thought and clear eye the world is so greatly indebted. But there is enough here to keep the intelligent reader thinking for many days.

Think of the creature absolutely untaught performing with precision a surgical operation that would puzzle the greatest human scientist.

And think of the strange way in which the murderous brutality of these hunting wasps feeding their young on creatures half alive suggests the worst brutality of the slaver who feeds his young at the expense of half-alive, paralyzed, unhappy child-workers.

Romeo and Juliet

THE Montagues and Capulets were most unfriendly neighbors
For when they'd meet
I was on the street
That I might draw and draw their aches
For, to escape too weak to fly the fray; their lot no bed of roses
Their exercise
Was scratching eyes
And pulling hair or noses
Now, Romeo and Juliet were sons of the factions
But what are feuds or families to physical attractions
Thus, Romeo II, Montague was neutral as a Swiss
Sweet Juliet
For when he met
Sweet Juliet
He vowed that he would kiss her
And Juliet looked to Romeo's eye and thought them rather jolly
She looked again
Decided then
That fighting was a folly,
And so, that night when all alone, believing none could hear her,
She prayed the swain
Would, at all times
And rather lose than let her
Two eyes to the open balcony, the light of water and stars
She also prayed
This gentle maid
Her did might love her to chuffs
Oh, to get out their Romeo's side, that for
And Romeo
Who stood by the
Made music to a virgin
You are here," she cried, and since that day
The pretty words
Those tragic words
Perfumed the breeze
For Romeo, so sweet to the eye, she was Thus, Juliet was king
I know she had her heart set on a husband
The love she had
The love she had," she warned her
The love she had
The love she had

Scene from "The Mysteries of Myra"—the powerful, emotional new motion picture drama founded on psychic phenomena.

If—the girl you love were hypnotized by an unseen power
—if she were surrounded by evil forces
—if the shadow of an unknown and terrible fate were falling over her
—what would you do?

You would do as any red-blooded man would do under the same conditions—and as Payson Alden did in the thrilling film play, "The Mysteries of Myra."

You would fight fire with fire.

You would master the dark secrets of the enemy—the subtle power of hypnotism, the far-flung slinking mystery of silent evil—and you would turn them into weapons to save the girl you love.

"As Myra, with the wide-open eyes of the somnambulist, approached the wall, a panel slid back, and she silently passed into the secret room."

Do You Know the Marvels of Psychic Power?

If you had told your grandfather fifty years ago that with an X-ray the human skeleton could be seen in a living body, he would have considered you mildly crazy.

If you had told him that men would ever talk through the air, their winged words flying across the trackless sea, he would have thought you a raving lunatic.

Yet today we can see through walls, and our messages beat back and forth in the air to the far corners of the earth.

The world stands today on the outer edge of the sea of knowledge.

We are merely beginning to understand the tremendous influence of psychic force—or mind power—with its influence for good or evil.

A few men, endowed with finely critical, scientific minds, are spending their lives in investigating psychic phenomena, with all its puzzles of spirit-rapping, telepathy, personal magnetism and materialization.

Such a man is Hereward Carrington, who, in collaboration with Charles W. Goddard, has written "The Mysteries of Myra."

Mr. Carrington is the world's greatest authority on psychic phenomena. In this great motion picture drama he tells you all he has learned in his lifetime of investigation.

The drama has been produced under the direction of Theodore and Leo Wharton, the most renowned directors of motion picture plays in the world.

The Mysteries of MYRA

By Charles W. Goddard, Dramatic Author of "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine," in Collaboration with Hereward Carrington, Expert on Psychic Phenomena.

When a master of evil, for his own selfish ends, began to weave the web of suggestion around Myra Maynard, it was done with such soft and cunning skill that no whisper of warning came.

Then Payson Alden saw—and brought the power of his keen and brilliant mind to her rescue. He became an adept in telepathy, in hypnotism, in psychic power—in all the great and hidden forces that throb beneath the current of life.

And the battle begins—without a spoken word. Plot meets counterplot, and Evil, reaching from afar through the velvet darkness, touches the cool, strong hand of Love raised like a wall.

This gripping story—in which the deadly power of the mysterious and unseen is brought to light—is depicted in this great motion picture drama. Every episode startles, and attracts, and mystifies, until the dramatic and stirring end.

PLAYS AT BOSTON THEATRES FOR CURRENT WEEK

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN
AT THE PARK

BOSTON THEATRE

The celebrated stage star, Miss Ethel Barrymore, will head the bill offered at the Boston Theatre the entire week of April 24, in the powerful, full-blooded story of Russian political intrigue and Jewish persecution, entitled "The Kiss of Hate." Miss Barrymore is supported by the eminent English actor, M. Cooper Cliffe, and a superb cast, including W. L. Abington, in a wonderful romance of Eastern life, with Miss De Grasse. "The Kiss of Hate" tells the story of a beautiful young Jewish girl, whose father, the Governor of Yablitz, a Russian province, notorious for its persecution of the Jews, is assassinated by the Pretor of Yablitz, and the real power in the district is assumed by James Diamond, a Jew, who, in "The Kiss of Hate," is a photo play written by and produced under the personal supervision of the late Richard Harding Davis, entitled "The Boy Scout." Another feature is "Diana the Huntress," pictured by Francis T. Miller and costumed by R. H. Moulton.

PARK THEATRE

Maria Barn, famous for her beauty and skill as an artist of stage and screen, will appear next week in Cecil Milla's production, "The Heart of a Hero," by Hector Turnbull. This is a Paramount production, supported by Beverly Hills, and will be seen in the Metro production, "The Wall Between," in five acts. Tonight, Audrey Smith is featured in the Frohm production, "The Builder of Modern Theatre."

ENTERTAINMENT

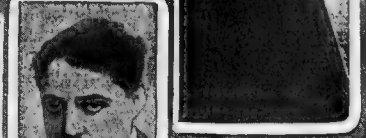

William Farnum is one of two male stars that lead their own plays at the Modern Theatre the coming week. Mr. Farnum plays in the William Farnum production, "A Man of Sorrows," a stirring drama of love, doubt and faith, founded on the famous story of the crucifixion. "Hoodlum Blues" on the same bill is John Barrymore in a photo dramatization of "The Old Widow," a comedy of the merriest situation.

OLD SOUTH THEATRE

Blanche Brierly and Lenora Vitch will be the stars featured in the Paramount production at the Old South Theatre the coming week. "The Heart of a Hero," by Hector Turnbull, will appear at the Old South Theatre in "The Kiss of Hate," a powerful, full-blooded story of Russian political intrigue and Jewish persecution, entitled "The Kiss of Hate." Miss Barrymore is supported by the eminent English actor, M. Cooper Cliffe, and a superb cast, including W. L. Abington, in a wonderful romance of Eastern life, with Miss De Grasse.

TREMONT TEMPLE

The Tremont Temple, the grandest of Boston, Frances Hodgson Burnett's fairy doll drama of "Rackety Huckleberry House," will be given by Miss Clara Bortoluzzi at the Copley Theatre Monday afternoon, inaugurating a series of children's matinees to be continued each Saturday at 2:45 and Saturday evenings at 5:15.

ETHEL BARRYMORE
AT THE BOSTON

ETHEL BARRYMORE

Frederic L. Lane, the general manager, has worked out an excellent running plan of the theatres for the Spring season, which enables the theatre owners to open their houses in the month of April and travel back and forth to business. Mr. Lane predicts the best season on record. An innovation on the Plymouth boat is the restaurant on the steamer South Shore.

ORPHEUM THEATRE

An all-star bill of vaudeville features will be offered by Marcus Love at the Orpheum Theatre to celebrate the first half of Easter week. The local favorites, Weber, Dolan and Fraser offer a brilliant act. The whirlwind dancers, Joe Cole and Gertrude Denahy have a prominent position on the bill, and there is the Vanita Four in a singing oddity entitled, "Faber's Bachelors." For the season's play there is the musical comedy, "Nashboro," played by Walter La Roy, Emily Lytton & Company. "The Italian and the Rose," Hendricks and Paduk, ragtime singers and pianists; Zita in a posing specialty and the Kratos comedy jugglers.

LOEW'S ST. JAMES

The St. James Theatre bill is headed by Julia Nash and company in a new comedy, "Lila," written by C. H. O'Donnell. Then there is Harry La Clair in his impersonations; Laura and Billy Drury in fancy dancing; Buffers and Chats, "Two Once From the Book of Fun," and Belle Oliver, singing a group of songs.

GLOBE THEATRE

The Globe Theatre will be headed by Daisy Harcourt, the English comedienne, who presents a repertoire of exclusive songs included in the bill for the first half of the week are Stone and Martin, entertainers; "Anybody's Husband," a novelty comedy incident by C. A. Keith and Frank Whittier, and Wartenberg Brothers, foot jugglers. The feature film is "Hold for Marriage," with Lillian Clark in the leading role.

COPELY THEATRE

As an Easter offering to the children of Boston, Frances Hodgson Burnett's fairy doll drama of "Rackety Huckleberry House," will be given by Miss Clara Bortoluzzi at the Copley Theatre Monday afternoon, inaugurating a series of children's matinees to be continued each Saturday at 2:45 and Saturday evenings at 5:15.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE

The Hollis Street Theatre will be headed by Julia Nash and company in a new comedy, "Lila," written by C. H. O'Donnell. Then there is Harry La Clair in his impersonations; Laura and Billy Drury in fancy dancing; Buffers and Chats, "Two Once From the Book of Fun," and Belle Oliver, singing a group of songs.

WILBUR THEATRE

At the Wilbur Theatre, Monday night, Louis Mann will present in the month of April and travel back and forth to business. Mr. Lane predicts the best season on record. An innovation on the Plymouth boat is the restaurant on the steamer South Shore.

WILBUR TESTIMONIAL

Tomorrow evening's opening performance of the five-star aggregation of William H. Crane, Thomas W. Ross, Madry, Arbuckle, Amalia Bingham and Edith Talleferro in "The New Horizons" will be given as a testimonial to Frank M. McCreath, business manager and treasurer of the Majestic Theatre.

Plays That Remain

PLYMOUTH THEATRE

Despite the general observation of Shakespeare's anniversary and the serious problems that vex the minds of all the world, May Irwin in "The Washington Square" continues to reign supreme at the Plymouth Theatre, the latest of a series of plays that will be shown in the month of May.

SHURET THEATRE

There will be a variety of acts at the Shurett Theatre, including a group of songs, a comedy, and a variety of acts. The bill is headed by Julia Nash and company in a new comedy, "Lila," written by C. H. O'Donnell.

Does the Soldier Killed in Battle Surely Go to Heaven?

A Belief Sanctioned by Religious Authorities That Consoles Many Soldiers in the Present War

By the Rev. Clifton H. Levy, Ph. D.

THE colossal tragedy of the present European war, putting a strain on the minds of men such as they have never known before, has inevitably raised many questions concerning the nature of the soul and psychical phenomena.

Does the soldier killed in battle go straight to Heaven, no matter what his sins? Have there been ghostly apparitions on the battlefield? Is it true that a brave soldier, having passions of more than ordinary intensity is most likely to haunt the scene of his earthly activities?

There are thousands of good people who devoutly believe in the affirmative side of these questions. Among the men of high intellectual ability who have discussed these questions are the Rev. Dr. Reginald J. Campbell, Hall Caine, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and Maurice Maeterlinck. They have all given credence in some degree to psychical phenomena in connection with the battlefield.

Of especial popular interest is the question raised in England, "Does the soldier killed in battle go straight to Heaven, no matter what his sins?"

Is it conceivable that a man who has perhaps led a disreputable life for twenty years, stealing, drinking, beating his wife or committing other offenses against society, shall for a few days or hours of bravery and patriotism be carried straight to eternal happiness?

If he had stayed safely at home, if there had been no war, if he had survived the war, if he had been physically unfit for military service, he would have remained an ordinary sinner and perhaps have come to a bad end. The mere accidents of war and a violent death insure him eternal happiness.

On behalf of the dead soldier it must be remembered that he has made the greatest possible sacrifice a man can make—he has given his life for others. That is why religious authorities and common people are generally inclined to think he must surely go to Heaven, in spite of all other considerations.

The Rev. Dr. Reginald J. Campbell, the most popular preacher in England, and also one of the most thoughtful, has practically expressed the opinion that the soldier would go to Heaven in any case. He relates how a soldier, who had excellently led a rather turbulent life, asked him:

"Sir, somebody has been saying in England that a man who dies for his country goes straight to Heaven, whatever his life may have been beforehand. Do you think it is true that if a chap has been a bit rascally, and yet gives his life in this way, he will be all right on the other side, or will he have to go to hell?"

The Rev. Dr. Campbell answered by asking the soldier what he would do in God's place. The soldier said: "I would give him a chance." The clergyman then told him that that was the reasonable view.

It is interesting to note here that one of the best pictures produced by the war deals with this subject. It shows Jesus appearing on the battlefield above the body of a dead French soldier and saying, "Come unto Me." This painting is by C. Arnold Slade, the American artist, and was exhibited at the Philadelphia Art Club.

The Rev. Dr. Campbell has made a most startling assertion concerning psychical phenomena on the battlefield. He has declared that many soldiers who have been killed during the present war have communicated with their friends and comrades after death.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, in a recent article on some remarkable psychical experiences of his own, has given a theory why a vigorous young person, such as a soldier, is more likely to make a ghostly apparition than another man. He says: "I volunteered once to sleep in a haunted house at Charmouth, in Dorsetshire. Two other investigators went with me, in the middle of the night a fearsome uproar broke out. It was not an accidental creaking of wood or anything of that sort, but a definite knock. We all drew apart, and I happened to glance at the light, and saw a shadowy figure. The doors were all closed, windows barred and the light broken. Figures took away the light and provided that we had been returned to our sitting room, while I waited in the dark in the hope of a return of the disturbance. None came, or ever did come. What occurred, I do not know."

not to children is as profitable as any other. It is the desire to please the mothers that if any one of the children is afflicted with the brain sickness of the monomaniac, their teaching is to the surprise. Precept upon precept does not exercise control in the unbalanced mind; neither is the child or reason her out of the impulse to do wrong. The child may reason intelligently on every other subject but when the mind approaches the acquisitive impulse it seems to strike the bottomless pit. There is nothing upon which the child can reason. This does not mean that the child is stupid or that the child shows a tendency to be light fingered has a rotten spot in the brain somewhere. The normal sense of mine and thine has been gradually bred into the child. It is not a natural instinct. It is a product of the normal and the conflicting tendencies of the mind is perfectly normal and deserves no more attention than the usual parental discipline.

Already before the war the excess amounted to some 2,000,000, and was increasing steadily. We have already 130,000 men dead from the flower of the nation and about 130,000 permanently disabled, and I fear before all is over that we must face the loss of nearly a million and a half of British breadwinners and potential fathers.

There are two principal effects that have to be considered. The future generation and work. It is almost impossible to consider these questions separately, for in these days they are absolutely interdependent, and yet all conditions will have changed so much after the war that we must examine the new factors in each question before coming to the joint future.

What is going to happen?

Some three million men are going to return, after months of open-air life, in a condition of physical fitness which they did not know was possible; with an outlook broadened to an incredible extent, with minds that have been toned and tuned by constantly facing death.

Is the clerk going back to toil with bent shoulders on an office stool for a pittance, after, perhaps, leading a platoon or a company in the field? Is the sergeant going back to be an agricultural laborer? the lieutenant or company sergeant-major a domestic servant? or the victorious soldier to the factory or mine?

Some trades and professions, of course, they will go back to, but the conditions of all forms of work will have to be materially changed, although there are going to be thousands who will seek a different form of employment with more responsibility and more freedom.

And women in the meanwhile are working. They have found that there is practically no form of wage earning that they cannot do, and do satisfactorily. Will those who have just made this discovery go willingly to rearing children in cramped and cheerless quarters? Some may, but most will not.

Yet the wastage of lives must and will be replaced, and the enormous increase of our trade after the war must be seen to. Women will undoubtedly, in enormously increasing numbers, continue to be wage-earners; men and women must earn higher wages, have a higher standard of living and enjoyment, and yet child-bearing must increase and infant mortality must decrease.

How is it to be done? How are women to rear children, feed children, husband and themselves, and yet keep their jobs in factory and office.

The answer seems to be of necessity one word—co-operation. The co-operative dining room, the co-operative nursery. Think what a difference to the bulk of the population just these two things would make. The clean, wholesome food in light, clean, bright rooms, prepared by trained cooks, instead of badly cooked, badly served scraps in a dingy kitchen. And then the saving of expense in the buying of large quantities instead of in ha'porths, in the fuel, in the preparation and in the productive force of the workers properly fed instead of starved or stunted.

Then the children, what it will mean to the rate of infant mortality to have the babies hygienically looked after and fed is incalculable, and that is an enormous gain to the country, when we pause to think that more babies die every year than the total of our killed in the war to date.

Add to these co-operative laundries, and you have broken the back of domestic work, and if, as is sure to come in time, we have proper dwellings in towns for working people—not the dirty, gloomy tenement of former days, but bright, clean, tasteful flats, with hot water and heating from a central furnace, and electric light, which, on the co-operative plan, could easily be run at a price to suit modern wages, and domestic drudgery would be practically done away with.

You have the foundation here of clean, wholesome, useful lives, and a possibility of a decent balancing of work, sleep and recreation, which lead to health and consequent efficiency. It will seem to old-fashioned people a crime to suggest that surroundings and comfort should be weighed should be allowed to weigh, against the bearing of children; but it is so, and everybody who does not wilfully shut their eyes must know it.

In every rank of life, practically, children are liable to the amount that allows of the most comfort to the parents, from the fishermen and factory hands, to whom a wife is an asset and a necessary presence, to the rich and who, therefore, eliminate the presence of a childless marriage but only at one end of the scale, to the third of the society where they have no children at all because of a serious and constant trouble.

Not only we all know, men's suits are an asset of the highest value to nation and office. The devastating war we are waging will have no effect on the suit industry.

polypropylene
ability to resist future

The lessons of the past show that nature does her best to restore the balance when war has decimated the manpower of a country. And though, I believe, for physiological reasons that will not be so obvious after this war still, it is sure to take time.

So to counteract the excess of women make the next generation as large as possible.

er, invited the American Museum of Natural History to re-examine the deposit. This resulted in a more systematic investigation, which gives us data of a more positive kind. The trial trenching was carried on by Mr. Anson Skinner and the stratigraphic work by Mr. Lewis Spier. The report of Mr. Spier fully agrees with Mr. Volk's observations, but presents some new problems. Mr. Spier discovered that the vertical distribution of the artifacts in this yellow sand took the form of a normal frequency curve. It was then possible to compare with precision the series from the various trenches and also with the former data of Mr. Volk.

By the triumph of method it was shown that through the deposit extends one plane of maximum frequency around which the artifacts fall in a normal frequency curve. Tablets of appreciable size were found in the sand and two series for these showed that they also had the same frequency curve with approximately the same average. In other words, the series for artifacts is the same as the pebble series, the former being but worked pebbles.

Hence the same agency that deposited the pebbles also deposited the stone implements. While man could have carried the artifacts and dropped them on a wind blowing sand down, it is inconceivable that he should have carried the pebbles, for they are many times more numerous than the worked stones. Further, a recent study of known wind and water deposits by a geologist shows that the normal frequency curve for coarse grains of sand is characteristic of water deposits, but not of wind carried material.

"Therefore the archaeological brief for this case may be said to be: It shows artifacts of stone deposited in a definite way, agreeing with our present knowledge of water deposits. These artifacts are distinct from and below the cultural debris of the Indians living here at the discovery of America, and are therefore older. The age of the deposit is a geological problem which awaits further investigation, but as a water deposit it must be not later than the last recession of the ice from northern New Jersey."

Dr. Wiesner makes this interesting observation upon the great antiquity of American man, as evidenced by the New Jersey and other discoveries:

The Latest Scientific Opinion of the Relics

"Some writers have given undue weight to the fact that all the skeletons so far presenting claims to antiquity are of the American Indian type, and so cannot be ancient. This is really a fallacy, for while the presence of a distinct morphological difference would be one good argument for a respectable antiquity, the absence of such differences would not be equally good evidence against it. Thus in Europe we find an early type known as the Cro-Magnon, which has its close parallels in the present population. Then the indistinguishable unity of the whole American (Indian) race from north to south leaves us no choice but to conclude that the ancestral stock came from one source, and that from the start its fundamental somatic characters were delimited. There are good reasons for believing that America received its population from a period comparable to the Paleolithic of western Europe, and that since the late Neolithic has remained in almost complete isolation."

And now for another opportunity to become familiar with our early low-browed ancestors? A remarkable series of busts showing just how the various types of prehistoric man related to the flesh has been on exhibition at the beautiful and popular San Diego Exposition.

Dr. A. Hrdlicka, curator of the division of anthropology in the United States National Museum, selected and bought these busts and other exhibits in Europe, after nearly three years' special investigation and research, for the Science of Man building at the exposition.

The busts were made from study of the original bones by M. Maes, a Belgian sculptor, under the direction of Professor Kuntz, of Brussels. It is believed these two men have since perished in defense of their native land.

First in the series of interesting busts prepared by MM. Maes and Kuntz for the San Diego Exposition, is the statue of the "Pithecanthropus Erectus Dubois," the ape-man who walked erect.

This is a creature of whom it can truly be said that it was neither man nor beast. His remains were discovered by Dr. E. Dubois, a surgeon of the Dutch army, while near Trinid, in Java, while he was exploring there in 1892. The remains were in a fragmentary condition, and the appearance of the original has been completely reconstructed after years of study.

"This creature had an ape-like face that yet showed more signs of human intelligence than any existing ape. He stooped forward like an ape, but he went all the time erect instead of going most of the time on all fours, as even the highest apes do. This fact is proved by the angle of articulation of his thighbone.

He was a vegetarian and did not know the use of fire. He was just a step more intelligent than the orang-outang, who must have been numerous in Java in his time. He lived at the close of the Tertiary period, probably 700,000 years ago.

Next in antiquity is the "Pitolden Man," called by scientists "Coastthropus lawsoni" after the English geologist who identified him. He is a recent discovery among prehistoric men and was quickly promoted to a place among the oldest of them, being ranked as far older than the Neanderthal man, who long reigned as the earliest man.

Reconstructions of All the Early Types of Men

The bones were found near Pitolden Common, in Sussex, England, and are now in the British Museum. Professor Dawson came to the conclusion that the man was earlier than the first half of the Pleistocene epoch, in which the glacial periods occurred. That means that this man lived when England had a warm climate, probably tropical. Tigers, lions and other animals now confined to the tropics then lived in Eng and the Pitolden man was distinctly human, although the ape-like features of his body were very noticeable. Even today we see many monkey-like men!

It is hardly necessary to say that man first showed his possibilities of being civilized when he began to treat his wife with respect, to protect her and to provide for her. Science has hitherto ventured to say little about the peculiarities of the earliest woman.

It is therefore particularly interesting to find that among the reconstructions shown at the San Diego Exposition is a bust of a very early woman. She is called "the woman of La Quina," and received this name because her remains were found at La Quina, in the department of Charente, France, in 1931. She lived in an early part of the Quaternary, the geological period in which the Neanderthal man lived. She was similar in type and period to the Neanderthal man.

The bust shows the La Quina woman protecting her child and snarling with the ferocity of a tiger at some person or animal who was threatening her. One observer who saw the bust remarked that this was the first sadistic. The artist is tempted to show the animal savagery with which this early woman defended her young. Perhaps she is defending it from a cave-bear or a tiger, but the man of her day may have been as ferocious and dangerous as a wild beast. It is interesting to note that we have seen this age was nearly equal in strength and ferocity to a man.

A later stage of human evolution is represented by the "Cro-Magnon Man," whose remains were also found in France. He may be called the ancestor of a modern man. He lived about 50,000 years ago. His features are distinctly human and show considerable intelligence. He made thin arrow heads and harpoons and other stone tools.

Commenting on these busts, Dr. Hrdlicka gave an interesting sketch of the present stage of the theory of evolution.

"The foremost naturalists of the last century," said Dr. Hrdlicka, "and, above all, Darwin, arrived at the deduction that man was an inalienable member of the animal kingdom, and that in common with all other species, he must have arisen from other forms by some form of evolution; but beyond analogies and the most inapt analogy of any other mode of his origin, they they had little tangible to show in support of this conviction. For a period of thirty years, however, and particularly with in the present century, matters have changed remarkably. Contemporaneously with the more precise and definite determination by geology and paleontology of the age of the various strata of the earth, particularly on the continent of Europe, it was learned that in certain localities some of the more superficial yet ancient strata told traces of man's presence, included in the deposits at the time of their formation. Such traces consist of worked stones, remains of implements, broken or used bones of long extinct animals and other objects shaped or used by intelligent beings. Thus it was shown conclusively that man occupied the European continent for many thousands and tens of thousands of years before the beginning of what is known as the historical era.

"But there have come to light from time to time even more convincing evidences of man's antiquity, namely, fossil remains of man himself. Skull after skull, as well as other bones of the skeleton, have been discovered, and under conditions which enable men of science to establish their great age beyond a reasonable doubt.

"As the result of the gradually accumulating evidence what was before merely a web of plausible theories respecting man's origin has taken the form of a range of well-ascertained facts. Today these traces of early man, archaeological and anatomical, already are as numerous and well authenticated that it is possible to demonstrate, not merely to the scientific world, but also to the intelligent public, whole phases of man's antiquity. The problems of man's evolution are no longer confined within the realm of speculation. The record is substantial and, although still imperfect in details, it becomes clearer and more amplified every year, and it already extends far merely to the very ancient representatives of man himself, but even to some of the more immediate of his precursors.

"It is ascertained that the further we go back along the course of man's physical progress the more simple appears his intelligence, the more primitive, the less human his features. When we reach the oldest specimens now known, namely, the jaw of Pitolden, the jaw of Neanderthal, the jaw of Java skeleton, there are serious uncertainties as to whether we still deal with early man, or already with his assumed forerunners.

"Further back than these last named remains we as yet lack material, which naturally must be exceedingly rare, that the space not yet covered is filled by best of the thought of distant from the earliest to present man. A step further backward we are carried down to beings that could only be characterized as anthropoid primates. It is from beings of this class that man must have differentiated."

and which was still running from above. The object (as I found it was after picking it up) was one foot inward to face of the bank. . . . I picked it up; there were three, a large and a smaller one; picked up the one first, then the smaller came to view; picked this up, large piece touching the little pebble on the left. Now careful measurements and found that this bone was yet seven inches below the greatest surface in a stratum two feet thick, one foot inward of the present face of a between two little pebbles.

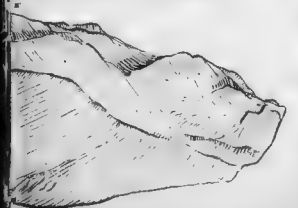

By the bone had been sent to Professor Putnam, of Harvard. Identification it was found to be part of the left femur of a being that had been cut off square at one end. The structure had been gouged out to enlarge the opening, had been perforated in two places; it had apparently a handle of some implement.

Days later he found another fragment of human bone—the partial bone of a human skull, twenty-four feet the femur and ten feet east of a polished pebble secured by man.

A hat with a small brim is becoming to the average stout woman and can be made to help create an illusion of height if the trimming is high. But a hat is much more than a stylish hat. It is a useful, thoughtful than the conventional turban to which for some inexplicable success or failure of her ensemble than one might think.

A stout woman's hands are often one of her best assets. If they are she should try to accentuate their strength and size by wearing gloves that she wears the same color as her dress. Gloves with broad, flat trailing ends that made of heavy materials like chamois should be avoided because they make the hands look large. White gloves of glove kid or silk for dress occasions and tan kid or silk for ordinary wear—these are the only good recommendations for stout women.

And now as to shoes, which current styles are making assume a greater importance than ever before.

As a substitute for black, which is rather trying, the stout woman may wear a navy blue veil with a gown of the same color. If her eyes are blue a gray veil, or if brown a brown veil, will do very nicely.

Before I finish with the subject of veils I must not fail to mention the curious illusion they give a woman of her own appearance when she gazes through one at her own image in a mirror.

When a woman looks at herself in the mirror either with or without a veil, she does not see herself as others see her.

her image is reversed and also it is something seen at twice the distance between her eyes and the mirror.

One Helps to Destroy Illusion of Slenderness and Height.

A Riddle With a Moral— Can You Guess the Answer?

I am more powerful than the combined armies of the world
I have destroyed more men than all the wars of the nations.
I am more deadly than bullets, and I have wrecked more homes than the mightiest siege guns.

I snare no one, and I find my victims among the rich and poor alike, the young and old, the strong and weak. Widows and orphans know me. I loom up to such proportions that I cast my shadow over every field of labor, from the turning of the grindstone to the moving of every railroad train.

I massacre thousands upon thousands of wage-earners a year,
I lurk in unseen places and do most of my work silently. You are warned against me, but you heed not.

I am relentless.
I am everywhere—in the house, on the street, in the factory, at railroad crossings, and on the sea.
I bring sickness, degradation and death, and yet few seek to avoid me.
I destroy, crush and maim; I give nothing, but take all.

I am your worst enemy.
What is the answer to this riddle which the Toledo Blade propounded to its readers? The answer is not "drink" or "hatred" or "selfishness." The answer is "I am Carelessness."

Four Styles of Hats Which
According to Mr. Malsin, No
"Stout" Woman Should Wear If She Wishes to Look Less "Stout."

If a stout woman were considering only the appearance she makes to herself when gazing in the mirror and not the appearance she makes to those around her, she would choose a veil with vertical stripes. Such a veil would not attract her own eyes an illusion of thinness. But it would not affect in this favorable way the appearance she makes to others. In fact, as I have said, a woman who is stout and wishes much to be preferred to one with stripes or any other pronounced pattern should choose a dress of plain color.

This completes the necessarily brief summary of the scientific principles which can be applied to the clothing of stout women in order to make them look less stout.

There is one more thing I hope I have—in making these principles—been in demonstrating the value of the scientific principles intelligently to the problem of dress. I believe I have made a notable contribution to the solution of the problem of a large percentage of American women but also to their

It is worry about the appearance they make rather than concern about their health which leads many women to undertake reduction treatments that are often exceedingly harmful. Now that it is possible for a woman to create an illusion of height, grace and stenderness by simply choosing the proper clothes she no longer need go to war with Nature over the too generous layers of flesh, with which she has been endowed.

Deion of the movies, have saved a value unprecedented in the history of the cinema. The films of the genre are commercially worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. A new asset has been placed on the market. The value of a young pair, I fear, could not be successfully estimated. The young couple, for example, as she on Anthony, would really be (to add—moreover, her charm, according to the opinion of a great number of critics and intellect—Nina de'Enola, the actress who played the role of the girl who remained youthful in appearance to a ripe old age, would, I am sure, be a very valuable asset for the cinema of youth, and while you can fool me by the fact that she is not a young girl, she is a canoness. The film does not tell us anything about her greatest asset, which went into the film, but it is a frank failure before the movie audience. Why? Because the film is not a young girl, but it can act; they can even appear young and beautiful, but on the screen they are every woman's foot on the ground of the face shows. Bernhardt to the contrary, she is a young girl on the stage, but on the screen she is a young girl. The film is a young girl at sixty does not appear to be a canoness of Rome, which is the moving picture of the young girl.

A Turkish Lounging
Dress

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with the latest in fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishments are at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York, and No. 1400 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

By Lady Duff-Gordon
("LUCILE")

So much interest was shown last week in the Turkish dress that I thought I would write about it. I hope that it will be a success. I have seen many of the Turkish and Greek dresses and they are all so beautiful that I am sure they will be popular.

I was told that the Greek dress was the most beautiful of the Eastern dresses. It is a simple dress, but it is so beautiful that it is the most popular of the Eastern dresses.

At the same time, the Turkish dress is also very popular. It is a simple dress, but it is so beautiful that it is the most popular of the Eastern dresses.

The picture shows a Turkish dress. It is a simple dress, but it is so beautiful that it is the most popular of the Eastern dresses.

On the left is a very charming tea gown modelled on the Greek lines—with just a suggestion of ancient Byzantium.

I hope to see this summer the wonderful suggestions from the Orient used more than they have been. There is no reason why they should not be as popular.

with modifications, of course, in out-of-the-way places as in the dresses.

Naturally, one's mind turns from Turkish to Greek. There is a greater resemblance to the Greek dress than ever before, day, to doubt, to the very broad variety in hat shapes, each one of which calls for its own special type of veil complement.

There is the riple veil, the tea veil, the new circular veil for wear with the Turkish, Georgian, sailor, and veils edged with rows of narrow ribbons or finished with a spangled border in Spanish suggestion. The reversible veil is novel, and then there are the gingham plaid veils, the new chamois dots and various strange combinations that are usually becoming.

The color assortment is notable. There are veils in the new beige and gray tones, as well as in amethyst, purple, tone de rose and many of the new pastel shadings. The harem veils are bound to have a fashionable vogue throughout the Spring and Summer. Quite properly many are ornamented with Baket traceries.

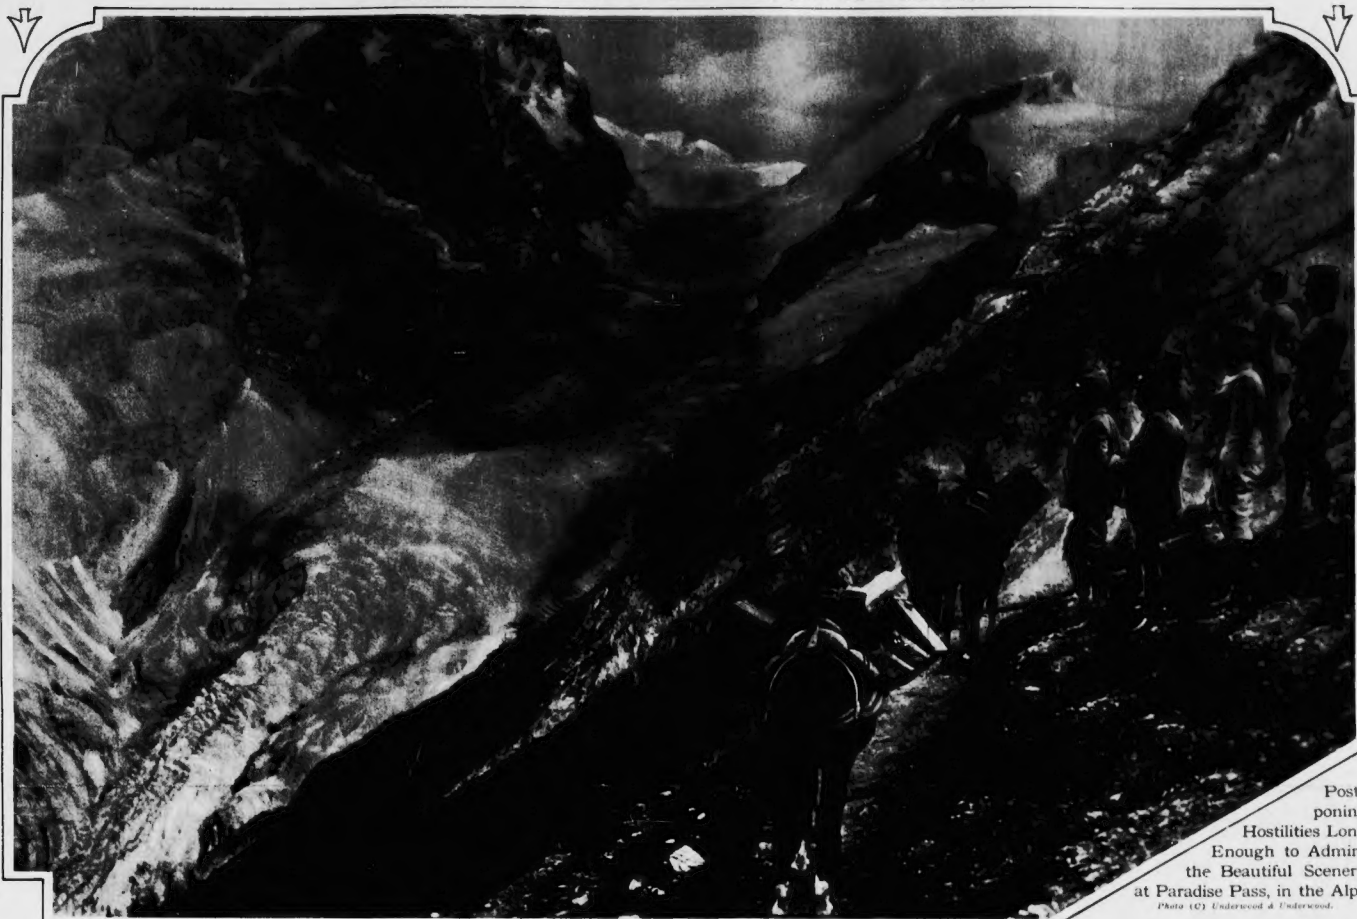

Brown veils are particularly liked for wear with the bronze hats. Marie Guy was the first one to introduce these hats, and since then they have appeared under the signature of other modistes in Paris. The straw hat in bronze is sometimes trimmed with bronze feathers or bronze fruit, and bronze kid is liked for the sport hat.
